Goren explains mamzerut ruling

Jerusalem Post Reporter
TEL AVIV. — Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren yesterday disclosed the reasons for the decision to lift the stigma of illegitimacy from the Langer brother and sister. At the same time, he rallied against "unbridled terror" by extremist religious elements.

Rabbi Goren was addressing the press at his home here four days after the double wedding in Tel Aviv of the Langers.

The case had involved the question of whether the Langer children's mother had or had not previously been married in Jewish law to Mr. Avraham Borkovskiy in Poland. A Petah Tikva Rabbinical Court had ruled the children illegitimate. In explaining the decision lifting the stigma of mamzerut from the Langers, Rabbi Goren said yesterday that there was no conclusive proof Mr. Borkovskiy had converted to Judaism, which would mean that his marriage to Mrs. Langer (then Miss Hava Ginsburg) did not hold.

Nearly 5,000 people gathered in Mea Shearim last night to protest against Chief Rabbi Goren's decision on the Langers and to rent their garments as a gesture of mourning. (David Peiser)

Second, even if it were true Mr. Borkovskiy had gone through a conversion ceremony, this was done for personal gain — i.e. in order to marry Mrs. Langer. For, said Rabbi Goren, Mr. Borkovskiy had returned to Christianity immediately after the supposed conversion and had baptized his son. Quoting Maimonides and other commentators, Rabbi Goren said that this invalidated the conversion, as a convert who returns to his original religion is considered as if he were never a Jew.

PRAYED IN CHURCH
Third, Mrs. Langer had converted to Christianity and prayed in church before going through her marriage ceremony with Mr. Borkovskiy. This made any Jewish ceremony invalid, and Judaism does not recognize a civil ceremony alone as binding.

Finally, Mr. Borkovskiy had never taken his conversion to Judaism seriously, and had shown himself unable to say the Shema — the basic Jewish prayer, — and did not know how to say teffilin. He had only agreed to return Mrs. Langer to her father after a long, violent, and financially costly struggle.

Rabbi Goren emphasized that the late Rabbi Ya'akov Levitzki of Givat Rambam had apparently known the facts in the case when in 1944 he married Miss Ginsburg to Mr. Langer, the father of the children in the case. Rabbi Levitzki had then listed her as single, he noted.

Rabbi Goren revealed that his investigation had turned up a 1947 report from a Tel Aviv social worker who had been sent to find why Mr. Borkovskiy's son was absent from school. The social worker had found that the boy was being kept home every day for day-long Christian prayers and observances.

MEIR INTERVIEW: Anti-Semitism behind Europe's tolerance of terrorism

MILAN (Reuter). — Prime Minister Golda Meir — in a magazine interview published here yesterday — accused European countries of tolerating Arab terrorism because of "an anti-Semitism still not extinguished."

Interviewed for the magazine "L'Europeo," Mrs. Meir said: "Thanks to your inertia and your acquiescence, terrorism will increase and you too will have to pay the price. Up till today there has been too much tolerance on your part — a tolerance which, allow me to say, has its roots in an anti-Semitism still not extinguished."

Mrs. Meir said she believed that the Middle East war would continue for many more years because of the indifference with which Arab leaders sent their own people to their death. She said that she would definitely retire from the premiership next year. "Many people do not believe that I will go. But they must believe it, and I will give them the date — October 1973 — when there will be the elections. When those are over, goodbye!"

Reiterating demands for direct peace talks with Arab leaders, Mrs. Meir said, however, that Israel would never give up Jerusalem. Israel would "not discuss Jerusalem," she was quoted as saying.

She thought that most Israelis would be prepared to give back to Jordan a part of the West Bank of the River Jordan, though the Israeli Government had not yet taken a decision on this.

She said in the interview that she thought Gaza should remain part of Israel though she would not object to the Arabs raising the question of Gaza if negotiations took place.

On the Golan Heights, she said that she was ready to negotiate with Syria on the condition that new boundaries would guarantee Israel a presence on the Heights.

"In other words, the Syrians today are exactly where the boundary should be fixed. On that we do not yield... Only if they remain where they are today will they stop shooting at us as they have for 19 years."

Discussing Sinai, Mrs. Meir said that Israel only wanted control of Sharm el-Sheikh and a stretch of desert linking it with Israel. "We know that the Suez Canal is not necessary to our defence and we already declare ourselves willing to give it up."

Mrs. Meir ruled out the possibility that the Palestinian refugees could be allowed to return to Israel.

"For 20 years they have been fed with hatred for us. They can no longer return among us."

The Prime Minister also said that Israel could not accept the creation of a third state between Israel and Jordan. "It would be used like a knife against us."

More Soviet Jews arrive — via Bucharest

LOD AIRPORT. — A group of Russian immigrants who arrived here yesterday inaugurated a new immigration route — via Bucharest.

The group arrived aboard the regular El Al flight from the Rumanian capital. More Russian immigrants arrived by special El Al planes from Vienna — the customary way-station — bringing the total to more than 300. Minister-without-Portfolio Yisrael Galili was on hand to greet the newcomers.

It is learned that representatives of Aeroflot, the Soviet airlines, are holding talks with Greece on opening a Moscow-Athens line. It is believed this may be connected with a Soviet plan to win some of the immigrant traffic to Israel — transporting immigrants to Athens, from which point they would continue to Israel by El Al. 40 Soviet Jews detained after Moscow protest

MOSCOW (AP). — Squads of police swept into the busy central telegraph and post office Wednesday and broke up a hunger strike and detained a total of about 40 Jews, sources reported yesterday.

The Jews were protesting the government's refusal to grant them exit visas to Israel.

The sources said the police arrived en masse shortly before 10 p.m. "There were about three or four militiamen for every Jew," said one eyewitness.

The Moscow correspondent of the Swedish daily, "Dagens Nyheter" reports that an increasing number of Jewish intellectuals will be allowed to leave the Soviet Union without paying a ransom tax. They would merely have to sign a statement saying they agree in principle with the tax but are unable to pay it.

Sapir line gets backing at Labour debate

By MARK SEGAL
Jerusalem Post Political Reporter
TEL AVIV. — Foreign Minister Abba Eban led the way at the Labour Party Secretariat meeting yesterday in lining up solidly behind Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir on the future map of Israel and the Government's policy in the territories.

The Sapir stand — which opposes the views of Defence Minister Moshe Dayan — enjoyed various degrees of support from Ministers of Commerce and Industry Haim Bar-Lev (in his first speech before a party executive forum), Knesset Security and Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Haim Zadok and the head of the party's young leadership, Michael Elisha.

The counter-view, outlined by such speakers as Haim Hakkibutzim leader Senta Josephthal, was that Mr. Sapir and Mr. Lyova Eilav by their minimalist stance made peace more distant because they discouraged the Arabs from coming to grips with reality and accepting Israel's existence.

They were taking part in the fourth session of the debate on the Government's policies in the territories. The next and final session is due to be held next month, with summing-up speeches expected from Premier Golda Meir, Mr. Dayan and the Minister without Portfolio, Israel Galili.

Outlying his "vision of peace," the Foreign Minister urged leaving all options open. He said that Israel's future borders should be different from the old ones, but the country should be without any sizeable Arab minority. He envisaged "a friendly neighbourly relationship" with the adjoining countries, involving trans-country transportation as in Europe.

Mr. Eban spoke of developing sources of employment in the territories, and dismissed Mr. Dayan's phrase that "the only way coexistence can flourish is under the rule of the Israel Government and under Zabal's protection."

He supported much of Mr. Sapir's arguments, especially on the demographic threat of an Arab population increase to Israel's Jewish character.

He considered the Alon plan the best territorial solution "because it omits the heavily populated areas in the West Bank."

Mr. Eban criticized the world press "for the personification of this debate. The Government's policy is not that of any one Minister but of the party as a whole. The press presents the debate as if it is a fashion show, with each designer depicting his creation."

Mr. Eban urged a five or ten-year plan for solving the refugee problem, and urged extending the (Continued page 2, Col. 3)

Dayan: No plans to integrate West Bank

By ERNIE MEYER
Jerusalem Post Reporter
Defence Minister Moshe Dayan said in Jerusalem last night Israel will not pull back from the Golan Heights, permit Arab forces west of the Jordan river, or give up Sharm el-Sheikh. But there is room to negotiate a new border with Egypt in Sinai somewhere between the old border and the Suez Canal.

Mr. Dayan was speaking at a dinner in the Knesset, marking the conclusion of the Ninth International Convention of the World Council of Synagogues.

Mr. Dayan said the Government does not plan to integrate the West Bank into Israel, but that normal commercial relations are healthy and desirable.

Speaking of Chief Rabbi Goren's recent action in the mamzer case Mr. Dayan said that he "considered it first-class leadership." He added that he expected the Chief Rabbi to solve problems, and not to create them.

Questioned on civil marriage in Israel Mr. Dayan said that he would favour it — if there was no other alternative. Mr. Dayan sidestepped a question on the recognition of Conservative rabbis in Israel and said that all Jews here should be free to pursue their own religious views.

At elections earlier in the day, Samuel Rotstein became the new President of the World Council. Tourism Minister Moshe Kol announced that he was joining the board of the Council.

Cairo warns Big Five on Israel

CAIRO. — Egypt told the big powers yesterday that it would not be indifferent towards Israeli attacks against Syria. The Egyptian Foreign Minister, Mohamed Hassan el-Zayyat, summoned the British, French, Soviet and Chinese Ambassadors, together with Joseph Greene, chief U.S. diplomat in Cairo, to discuss "the latest Israeli aggression on Syria," an official announcement said.

It said Zayyat drew their attention to the fact that Egypt's well-known ties with Syria — the two countries are partners in the proposed Federation of Arab Republics, with Libya — "dictates the Egyptian Government stand towards this aggression."

This was the second time within 24 hours that Zayyat had conferred with the British, French and Soviet Ambassadors on Tuesday's Syria-Israeli fighting.

The Deputy Premier and Minister of Information and Culture, Mohamed Abdel Kader Hatem, said that Egypt has taken urgent steps to support Syria. He made the statement after a long Cabinet session.

The Syrian authorities on their part yesterday continued to maintain a high state of alert along their southern border. Formations of Syrian planes were yesterday reported to have continued to patrol that country's airspace for the second day running.

No terrorist activity has been reported across the northern cease-fire line since last Tuesday. The terrorists have been using the southern sector of Syria as a main stepping-off point for their sabotage activity. (See Middle East Scene, page 12).

Syrian military group due in Cairo today

By ANAN SAFADI
Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter
A high-ranking Syrian military delegation is due to arrive in Cairo today for talks with the Egyptian army command. Cairo's mass circulation newspaper, "Al-Akhabar," reported yesterday.

The newspaper said that the Syrian delegation was coming for a short visit. It did not disclose the purpose of the Syrian visit, which follows last Tuesday's flare-up along Syria's southern front with Israel.

The Syrian delegation will probably hold discussions in the framework of the Cairo-Damascus military coordination laid during the visit of Egyptian War Minister General Ahmed Ismail to Syria a fortnight ago. Ismail's talks in Damascus at the time were followed by reports indicating that Egypt was placing part of its combat warplanes in Syria under the command of the Syrian General Staff.

The Damascus government-controlled news media radio yesterday continued its criticism of other Arab countries for maintaining the border cease-fire while Syria engaged in fighting with Israel.

Golan reopened to civilian traffic

The Golan Heights were yesterday reopened to civilian traffic. "Itim" reports from Kiryat Shmona that repairs continued on water mains and electricity damaged in the Syrian shelling on Tuesday.

Syrian soldiers across the border were seen clearing away rubble and rebuilding their positions.

El Al stewardess wins long battle Work contract struck down as discriminatory to women

TEL AVIV. — El Al stewardesses yesterday won their battle for equality with the male stewards when the District Labour Court here struck down three clauses in their work contract as discriminatory to women.

The court, presided over by Judge Hanna Shaked, thus ended a 17-month-long legal battle by El Al stewardesses Edna Hasin against the company, the Clerks Union and the cabin crew's works committee (whose male majority had opposed her fight to change the contract).

Under the three clauses struck down yesterday:

- stewardesses were barred from promotion to the jobs of steward-purser, and senior purser;
- a stewardess who became pregnant was put on immediate unpaid leave and then fired when she gave birth;
- a stewardess who married a steward or air crewman without notifying El Al was immediately sacked.

The company had defended the clauses partly on the ground of the high turnover of stewardesses, and offered figures showing that a third of the stewardesses hired by El Al after March 1968 had left by the end of last year (as against only 14 per cent of the male stewards). But the court pointed out that one reason for this may have been the fact that stewardesses could not look forward to promotion.

The company's other arguments, including security (heard behind closed doors), were ruled essentially irrelevant. The court said that while security probably made it desirable that the cabin crew include a certain number of men, this did not mean all the purser's jobs had to be reserved for men.

It added that it felt the respondents had considerably exaggerated the number of heavy containers pursers have to lift.

The automatic unpaid leave for pregnant stewardesses was struck down as unlawful dismissal, as the law provides that a woman may not be fired during maternity leave. The firing of stewardesses who marry without company permission was similarly rejected.

The court had sharp criticism for the Clerks Union, which had not even bothered to present a defence. It also asked why the labour committee representing the stewards and stewardesses was composed of four men and only two women, when the stewardesses make up 50 per cent of the cabin crew.

Miss Hasin, the stewardess who brought the action, was awarded IL2,000 costs, half to be paid by El Al and half jointly by the Union and the cabin crew's committee. (Nim)

'Turning point in fight for equal rights'

TEL AVIV. — El Al's women's lawyer Alisa Tamir hailed yesterday's Labour Court decision against sex discrimination in El Al as a turning point in the fight for equal rights for working women.

Mrs. Tamir, secretary of the Histadrut's Salaried Women Workers' Division, was speaking at a press conference celebrating the quashing of work-contract clauses which put the stewardesses at a disadvantage with respect to stewards. Flanked by several of the victorious stewardesses, she noted that the court decision came just as her division was fighting for better representation of women in the Clerks Union (which includes the stewards and stewardesses).

Noting that it was the stewards who had influenced the El Al management to discriminate against their female colleagues, Mrs. Tamir added that the problem was not limited to the airline alone. Declaring, "We feel discrimination against women all down the line in legislation," Mrs. Tamir said that women formed 40 per cent of Israel's civil servants yet they held only 3 per cent of the senior positions. She also pointed to the fact that only 5.5 per cent of Knesset Members were women.

Local notables to guard synagogue Vandals desecrate Tora in Hebron shrine

Hebron notables, including Mayor Mohammed Ali Ja'abari, have expressed their "profound shock" at an act of religious vandalism committed yesterday in the synagogue of the Tomb of the Patriarchs and have volunteered to take responsibility for guarding religious articles in Machpela Cave in future.

The statement was made in a meeting with Tat-Aluf Vardi, West Bank Military Governor, of the Mayor, the local head and rabbi, the chief religious custodian of Machpela Cave, and the director of the local bank (Moslem religious trust). The meeting was held after a Tora scroll was damaged and two books of psalms destroyed by vandals yesterday morning.

Shelich Ja'abari said the act of vandalism at Machpela Cave could not have been the work of an observant Moslem, "since a faithful Moslem respects the Tora as much as he does the Koran."

The incident was also deplored by a number of other Moslem notables, including Anwar Nusseibeh, a member of the East Jerusalem Supreme Moslem Council.

Jewish settlers of Kiryat Arba, who operate the kosher restaurant adjacent to the Cave, discovered pages torn out of the psalm books littering the ground yesterday morning, when they arrived to open the restaurant. They followed the trail of torn pages to the synagogue recently established in the Cave and discovered the Holy Ark had been broken into and a Tora scroll taken out and desecrated. Several pages of the psalm books were charred, indicating an attempt to set them on fire may have been made by the vandals.

A police investigation, under the personal supervision of Sgan-Nitzav Shosh Givati, Judea District Police commander, was begun immediately.

U.S. Jews want active critical role of Israel

Jerusalem Post Reporter
American Jewish leaders participating yesterday in the final session of the President's Conference said they wanted to play a more active role in criticizing defects in Israeli society, but implied that Israeli leaders were not willing to listen to criticism.

Rabbi David Polish, president of the (Reform) Central Conference of American Rabbis, said American Jews were concerned about problems of morality in Israeli society and wanted to express criticism on internal Israeli affairs.

Rabbi Louis Bernstein, president of the (Orthodox) Rabbinical Council of America, said that in order for identity of American Jews with Israel to be complete there must be mutual criticism as between members of the same family.

Rabbi Israel Miller, president of the American Zionist Federation, criticized Israelis who emphasize the country's physical and economic accomplishments rather than her spiritual significance. He said Israeli leaders should not come to the U.S. only to collect funds. They are needed as well to strengthen Jewish identity in America.

Isaiah Minkoff, of the National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council, said American Jewish leaders should hold discussions not just with Israeli political leaders but also with intellectuals and educators on the basic problems of Israeli society.

Rabbi Yehuda Nadich, president of the (Conservative) Rabbinical Assembly, expressed concern that the ally of young American Jews to Israel could remove an important element from the American scene and would endanger the future of Jewish leadership there. He said the time had come to devote more efforts to the strengthening of American Jewry.

INTELLECTUALS
Isaiah Minkoff, of the National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council, said American Jewish leaders should hold discussions not just with Israeli political leaders but also with intellectuals and educators on the basic problems of Israeli society.

MUTUAL CRITICISM
In response to the criticism, Jewish Agency Chairman Arye Pincus said that discussions and mutual criticism between Israel and the Diaspora should be encouraged. At the same time, he said, the final decision on Israeli matters must rest with those Jews living in Israel. He said the concept of the centrality of Israel in the life of the Jewish People does not contradict the independence of Diaspora Jewry. He said the Agency's Youth and Hehalutz Department, also supported the concept of free discussion between Israel and the Diaspora; but he stressed that criticism of Israel should be based on an understanding of the realities of the country.

Mrs. Charlotte Jacobson, head of the American Section of the World Zionist Organization, concurred that

University talks bogged down
Jerusalem Post Reporter
Negotiations on a final settlement of last month's student strike are bogged down because of the Justice Minister's refusal to allow a Tel Aviv judge to serve as chairman of the arbitration committee.

The committee was to establish criteria for grants to needy students to offset tuition hikes. It is to comprise one student, one representative of the universities, and a third (chairman) to be agreed on by both sides.

The two sides (represented by Prof. Shlomo Simonson, Rector of Tel Aviv University, and Bar-Ilan graduate student David Altman) agreed earlier this week on Tel Aviv District Court Judge Yosef Harish as chairman. Justice Minister Y.S. Shapiro, however, denied Judge Harish permission to serve on the committee. He said judges should not be involved with committee which do not deal with basic issues but are merely designed to arbitrate.

Hausner to urge postponement on civil marriage bill
TEL AVIV. — Knesset Member Gideon Hausner will recommend to the Independent Labour Party convention next week that it agree to put off the vote on his pending civil marriage bill, in order to give Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren time to deal with the problem, Mr. Hausner announced yesterday.

The I.L.P. leader said he nevertheless would insist his civil marriage bill not be struck off the Knesset agenda. Mr. Hausner communicated this in a statement to the press issued from I.L.P. headquarters, in reaction to newspaper reports which quoted him erroneously as saying he was determined to press for a vote on his bill.

'Iraq is further mistreating remaining Jews'
Jerusalem Post Reporter
HAIFA. — The Iraqi authorities have stepped up their mistreatment of the 350 to 400 Jews left in Iraq, Moshe Shahal, M.K., told a solidarity meeting at City Hall last night.

He said that, according to information from reliable sources, all Jewish adults are now required to report to the police at least once a day, and inspectors keep a close watch on Jewish schoolchildren. He said all efforts to establish the reason for the recent arrest of nine Jews, one of whom was later murdered, had failed. Six of the prisoners are elderly men, including a doctor, an engineer and a once well-to-do merchant.

INTERFERENCE
The students have sharply denounced what they term "interference" by the Justice Minister. Student Union chairman Yigal Lancker told The Post yesterday that he will apply to the Prime Minister to settle the matter.

Attempts to get other persons in public life to act as committee chairman have failed so far, Lancker said. Haim Laskov was approached, but he declined. Prof. Y. Klinghoffer, M.K., was suggested, but the students later decided not to approach anybody active in politics, he added.

It has been learned that Education Minister Yigal Alon tried to get Mr. Shapiro to change his mind, but did not succeed.

Aguda M.K. resigns seat
Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter
Rabbi Shlomo Gross resigned his Knesset seat Wednesday to make way for the next man on the Aguda list, Rabbi Ya'acov Mizrahi, a party leader from the Mizrahi Yeminite community.

In a statement to the press, Rabbi Gross recalled that before the 1968 elections he had undertaken to resign his seat one year before the Knesset completed its four-year term.

Rabbi Gross has served some eight years in four different Knessets. He heads the Hungarian-Rumanian grouping in Agudat Yisrael and is an adherent of the Wisnitsz hasidic trend.

Man jailed for stabbing daughter

TEL AVIV. — A 61-year-old man from Ramle, who stabbed his daughter, was sentenced to 18 months in prison by the District Court here yesterday.

The man, Shimon Barnes, entered his 24-year-old daughter's room while she was asleep, according to the charges, and tried to stab her in the chest with a kitchen knife. She woke up, however, and struggled with him, managing to get away with cuts in her arm only.

The accused, according to a doctor's testimony, shows aggressive tendencies only toward members of his own family. This was established by his son to an accident and subsequent illness which Barnes suffered several years ago. Until then, according to the son, Barnes worked and supported his family with devotion.

The three-judge panel determined there was no appropriate institution to which to send the man, and decided on the prison sentence in spite of the danger they felt it might present to his health. They also recommended that the daughter, Shoshana Barnes, be separated from him when he is released after serving his sentence. (Nim)

Woman held in stepdaughter's death
NABLUS. — Police here arrested a 38-year-old woman suspected of causing the death of her 32-year-old stepdaughter. They think she struck her stepdaughter on the head with a sharp instrument during an argument over an inheritance.

The victim died two days after she was admitted to the government hospital here with a brain haemorrhage. (Nim)

TWA plane causes alert at Lod Airport

Jerusalem Post Reporter
Failure of an instrument panel indicator on an incoming TWA airliner caused an emergency alert at Lod Airport yesterday morning, but the Boeing 707 landed safely with 80 passengers on board.

The plane, en route to Washington from the Far West, signalled Lod at 6:30 yesterday morning that the instrument panel did not indicate that the landing gear, which the pilot had released for the Lod touchdown, was in place. The pilot was instructed to override the alarm by enabling the engine tower to check while fire-fighting equipment and other rescue measures were ordered to their posts. After his wheels were observed to be in position, the pilot was informed he could land.

At Lod the trouble was traced to an electric short circuit affecting part of the instrument panel. The fault was repaired and the plane took off for Europe on its way to the U.S. at 10:45 a.m., nearly five hours after scheduled takeoff.

'Weizmann Letters' J'lem offices close, tight budget blamed

REHOVOT. — The "Weizmann Letters" offices in Jerusalem have been closed due to soaring costs and difficulties in financing, Meyer W. Weisgal, chairman of the editorial board and general editor, announced yesterday. The budget in Rehovot will be cut and work reorganized on a more rational basis, he said.

"When the work is resumed, we shall of course adhere to the standards of historical scholarship so far maintained. I am hopeful the re-organization will make it possible to achieve our aim of publishing the bulk of the Weizmann letters at the earliest possible date."

New home approved for Bezalel near Israel Museum

Jerusalem Post Reporter
The District Planning Commission this week approved the construction of a new home for the Bezalel Academy of Art and Design alongside the Israel Museum.

The school will be located below the Billy Rose Sculpture Garden. Its architect is Akram Mansaf, who also designed the Museum. The new building will be similar in design to the Museum and will be similarly faced with unpainted marble.

One of eight quads dies

Jerusalem Post Staff
HAIFA. — One of the quadruplets born to Mrs. Mary Kabani here on Tuesday died early yesterday.

The baby, a girl who weighed one and a half kilos at birth, died of respiratory insufficiency.

Dr. M. Seizer, director of the Department for Premature Babies at Rambam Hospital here, said the other three children, two boys and a girl, were doing fine.

Meanwhile, the other set of quadruplets born Tuesday at Assaf Harod Hospital to Mrs. Sol Ohayon is doing well. The only girl of that quad, who had been in an incubator, has now been taken out.

The Hogue paper factory has contributed IL1,000 worth of disposable diapers to the Ohayon quadruplets. A special account for contributions, No. 2874/78 at Bank Leumi in Ramle, has been opened.

TOTAL NOW OVER IL11,000 Eran, 5, gives favourite truck to Toy Fund

The Jerusalem Post Toy Fund H.Q. has decided this year to skip the Toy Fund pins distributed in the past to all youngsters. The pins were a feature of the Toy Fund for the past 15 years. We promise we will make something really special next year for our 25th birthday, which comes just after the 25th Anniversary of the State.

We trust this will not disappoint little Eran of Petah Tikva too much. Eran, a gallant five-year-old, has sent in his most beloved toy — a double-decker truck for hauling cars — because he had overheard his parents discussing the fact that they really could not double their contribution in honour of the family's newborn Yaniv. We will make sure this gift goes to some little boy who will love it as much as he did.

Yesterday's mailing brought in IL1,076, which brings the total so far to IL11,005.56. The first candle will be lit next Thursday night — please keep your gifts coming quickly.

HEATH DEFEATED ON MOVE TO AID MART MIGRANTS

LONDON (Reuter). — A chastened British Government decided to move warily yesterday after a surprise parliamentary defeat on immigration regulations.

Official sources said the Government was in no mood to rush into action on an issue it felt had been confused by misunderstanding and mixed motives.

The defeat came on Wednesday night by 275 votes to 240 after a House of Commons debate on provisions for controlling entry into Britain. Opponents said the proposed rules favoured citizens from European Common Market countries over those from the Commonwealth.

It was the first parliamentary reverse on a significant issue since Prime Minister Heath's Conservative Party came to power in the June 1970 general election. It was also highly unusual because the Government had put its supporters under the strictest disciplinary pressure.

The question of the Government's resignation does not arise, but Ministers will now have to find ways of making concessions to Conservatives who rejected the regulations.

They must submit new rules within 40 days, but political sources predicted they would want to take a careful new look at the problem before risking a second defeat on an unexpectedly emotive issue.

Wednesday night's vote resulted from what parliamentary observers called an uneasy alliance between Conservative rebels and members of the Labour and Liberal opposition.

Motives were often mixed, observers said. The Conservatives mainly were protesting against regulations which they felt gave Common Market nationals preference in freedom of entry and working rights over Commonwealth citizens — especially those from the old, predominantly white countries of Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

Others felt the rules were more favourable to the "white" Commonwealth than to African and Asian members.

An extra impetus, observers felt, came from the strong undercurrent of opposition to British entry into the Common Market. Anti-Market parliamentarians halted the vote as a great victory.

Basically, the rules defeated on Wednesday night were drawn up to bring British immigration law into line with European Community regulations on freedom of entry and working rights among member countries.

The adverse vote came despite reassurances from Government speakers that senior ministerial consultations would take place with the governments of Canada, Australia and New Zealand to prevent any hardship.

The most perplexing difficulty for the Government may be how to meet the demand of Conservative rebels for preferential treatment for those who want to work in Britain from the old "white" Commonwealth. The question is how to do this without discriminating against the newly independent Commonwealth countries in Asia and Africa.

ELEPHANTS. — Four wild elephants looking for food completely destroyed the kitchen of a house occupied by the caretaker of the Paga Kano Dam about 110 kms. north of Kuala Lumpur, officials said yesterday.

POLICE SEIZE 100 PERONISTS

BUENOS AIRES. — Police seized nearly 100 Peronist demonstrators on Wednesday in a clash near the home of ex-President Juan Peron in a suburb of Buenos Aires.

A group of several hundred persons were stopped at a police checkpoint near the house. They refused to go back and tried to break through, and the police fired teargas grenades and charged the demonstrators.

A police helicopter hovered overhead directing the operation. The police had permitted more than 100,000 persons to jam into the street over the weekend to give Peron a noisy welcome home after 17 years in exile. On Monday, however, roadblocks were put up and only small groups were permitted to pass. On Tuesday night some 1,500 Peronists were ordered away and the area was sealed off, with police stationed throughout the zone.

A Government communique said the action was taken to protect Peron from a "direct attack" planned by persons who had infiltrated the Peronist youth movement.

President Alejandro Lanusse said Wednesday that the return of Peron was a very "positive" factor towards restoration of democratic government to Argentina, but indicated that the armed forces would block any attempt by him to regain power.

"The armed forces also have to give their opinion" about any presidential candidate for the forthcoming elections, said Lanusse, who heads the country's military government and its army.

Lanusse, addressing correspondents, made no reference to a report of an assassination plot against Peron that his own office distributed earlier. But he stressed repeatedly that it was his Government's responsibility to provide the fullest security measures for Peron, measures that in effect also limit Peron's activity here. (AP, UPI)

Amin counts 'and warns' missionaries

KAMPALA. — European and other non-Ugandan missionaries reported to Diocesan offices throughout Uganda yesterday for a special census ordered by the government on Tuesday. Immigration officers handed out forms on which the missionaries had to write their names, places of work, qualifications and residence permit details.

The atmosphere at the centres in Kampala was relaxed, and officials appeared to be doing their best to be helpful and courteous.

But the purpose of the census, which has not been mentioned in the official news media here, is still not entirely clear. It applies not only to European church workers, but also to non-Ugandan Africans. There are a number of Rwandese and Sudanese clergymen attached to the Protestant Church here to serve the thousands of Rwandese and Sudanese refugees in Uganda.

President J.J. Amin said on Wednesday night he wanted the church in Uganda to be run entirely by Ugandans so that there was no possibility of subversion by foreign missionaries.

He told a conference of women's representatives here that, following the expulsion of Uganda's 40,000 non-citizen Asians, "the imperialists may try to come back through religion and cause confusion in the country." (Reuter, AP)

Two terrorists killed in clash with patrol in Lebanon

BEIRUT. — Two terrorists were killed in a clash with a Lebanese army patrol in south Lebanon yesterday, police reported last night.

Three other terrorists belonging to Fatah were disarmed and arrested in the shooting incident that occurred near the town of Hashaya on the foothills of Mount Hermon, according to police sources.

The incident followed angry demonstrations by Lebanese villagers protesting the return of terrorists to the area they evacuated following a massive Israeli incursion in September, the sources said.

The army patrol, sent to prevent a clash between terrorists and villagers, came under terrorist fire and Lebanese soldiers returned fire, the sources claimed.

There was no immediate comment from the terrorists yesterday.

Another terrorist was killed in a shooting incident with a Lebanese police patrol in Beirut Tuesday. (AP, UPI)

Norwegian forces search for phantom submarine

OSLO (Reuter). — Dozens of Norwegian naval vessels and planes combed the waters of a narrow fjord in west Norway yesterday for a foreign submarine — perhaps Russian — believed to be lurking here for the past two weeks.

Officials said the mysterious vessel has remained submerged for 13 days. Naval experts have, therefore, drawn two conclusions — either that it is a nuclear submarine which can remain under water for a long time, or that the submarine has somehow succeeded in surfacing unnoticed to "breathe."

A defence command spokesman said the hunt is developing into an endurance test — because the submarine could remain in the fjord for weeks, taking advantage of its excellent hiding places.

The submarine, which most Norwegians believe to be Russian, could be hiding in the Sogndalsfjord, a 16-kilometre wide bay on the northern side of the 200 kilometre long Sognefjord.

Two British anti-submarine helicopters, which had been taking part in the hunt for several days, were withdrawn yesterday under an advance agreement. A Norwegian spokesman said there was no immediate plan to ask for assistance from other NATO countries.

On Wednesday the Norwegian frigate Trondheim fired a Norwegian-built Tern anti-submarine missile after sonar devices spotted a moving submerged object. But nothing happened.

Nato urged to extend navies to Indian Ocean, South Atlantic

By BRIAN ARTHUR
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

BOONN. — A prominent committee of NATO parliamentarians yesterday called on the Atlantic Alliance to extend naval protection to Western Europe's "vital shipping lines in the Indian Ocean and the South Atlantic, including surveillance and communications."

The Military Committee of the "Atlantic Assembly," an advisory body of 200 lawmakers from 14 NATO countries, made the recommendation to the full Assembly, which has been holding its annual meeting in Bonn this week.

British conservative M.P. Patrick Wall, who was author of a committee report on the "Soviet Maritime Threat," told newsmen yesterday that "50 per cent of Europe's oil and 25 per cent of its foodstuffs" are shipped around South Africa's Cape of Good Hope.

The committee also proposed a 10-year NATO projection of its oil needs and a study of ways to increase European oil stocks.

"A main theme of the committee's findings is that the North Atlantic Alliance is being outflanked by Soviet naval forces in the north, south, and Mediterranean."

COMBAT LOSS OF B-52 ADMITTED

Two American planes crash in Vietnam

SAIGON. — Two U.S. Air Force spotter planes crashed in South Vietnam yesterday bringing to seven the number of American planes lost in combat in the past four days, the U.S. Command said.

U.S. fighter-bombers continued to pound targets below the 20th parallel, flying 90 sorties in the 24-hour period ending at 5 p.m. yesterday, the Command said.

The U.S. Command said the B-52 bomber, which crashed in Thailand on Wednesday, probably had been hit by a Sam missile. It was the first time the U.S. has admitted the combat loss of a B-52, which carries a six-man crew. All parachuted safely when the strato-fortress went down, the Command said.

The U.S. has recorded six of the bombers crashing accidentally in Indochina since 1965.

Hanoi Radio, announcing it had shot down the bomber, said it was the 19th shot down by North Vietnamese air defences.

On the ground, heavy fighting ranged over much of the length of South Vietnam, with both sides seeking to gain as much terrain as possible before any cease-fire.

A Saigon military spokesman said Marine positions in the northernmost province of Quang Tri were shelled heavily for the 12th consecutive day yesterday, with about 1,400 shells falling on or near targets. Four marines were killed and 15 wounded.

CAMBODIA BORDER

In action near the Cambodian border south-west of Pleiku, 360 kms. north of Saigon, spokesmen said 27 Communists and six government troops were killed in heavy fighting.

In Cambodia, Vietcong forces re-occupied the 90-kilometre stretch of Highway Two reaching south from Phnom Penh to the provincial capital of Takeo.

Meanwhile, South Vietnam, despite its opposition to a draft peace agreement being thrashed out in Paris, yesterday took steps to prepare for a post-cessate-fire political battle.

President Nguyen Van Thieu summoned his top policy-making body, the National Security Council, to discuss political measures to be taken in the event of a cease-fire, informed Government sources said. Heads of the national police, military security and the government pro-

Belgian King consults over gov't crisis

BRUSSELS (UPI). — King Baudouin yesterday consulted political leaders on a way out of the government crisis caused by a split in the ruling majority over problems between Belgium's French and Flemish language communities.

Premier Gaston Eyskens Wednesday handed in the resignation of his Social Christian-Socialist coalition, but the King reserved his reply.

The King waited to begin his consultations until Indonesian President Suharto left Brussels at 12.30 p.m. after a three-day state visit to Belgium.

The first to be called in by the King early in the afternoon were Edmund Leburton and Jos van Eynde, co-chairmen of the Socialist party.

The Socialists blamed their Socialist Christian government partners for the crisis when the Social Christians turned down an Eyskens compromise on outstanding issues between the Flemish and French-speaking communities.

Nato asked to fight hijackers

BOONN (Reuter). — The Nato Assembly issued an urgent call to Nato member governments yesterday to fight hijacking and terrorism by cutting off flights and foreign aid to countries harbouring air pirates.

In a sweeping package of recommendations approved by the Assembly, delegates urged their 14 member governments to refuse landing and servicing rights to the national airlines of countries which aided terrorists.

The recommendations also called on Nato governments to exert political pressure on the Greek government for a restoration of parliamentary democracy there.

The recommendations of the Assembly do not have formal authority, but delegates said they carried weight with the Nato authorities.

How to find and meet a Jew in Russia

NEW YORK (Reuter). — The American Jewish Congress has published a "briefing kit" for travellers to the U.S.S.R. subtitled "How to find and meet Russian Jews." The kit contains facts on what to bring, where to go and what to say. It is sprinkled throughout with a caution to tourists wishing to contact Russian Jews.

Editors Phil Baum and Zev Furst, of the Congress's Commission on International Affairs, point out that the kit contains nothing which violates Soviet law and in fact urges "strict conformity with Russian regulations." Nevertheless, it is suggested that the kit itself be read and studied — then left at home.

On the topic of what to bring, "one or two" singularly Jewish items are suggested, such as a daily prayer-book, a prayer shawl or a Jewish calendar. And if the tourist would like to leave small gifts with Russian Jews whom he meets, blue jeans and albums of rock or country music are suggested.

The traveller is warned: "No material of a political nature... should be carried with you."

The synagogue, the Jewish cemetery and the university are suggested as places where one may meet Soviet Jews.

The tourist is urged to make himself — and his Jewishness — highly visible at these places, in order to allow cautious Soviet Jews to warm up to the idea of speaking to a strange foreigner.

The kit also contains facts on American Jews, Israel, a list of Russian synagogues and maps and directions to synagogues in Moscow, Kiev and Leningrad — just in case, the Soviet taxicab driver feigns ignorance of their locations.

'Nice gesture' Allende asked Kremlin to release Jews

WASHINGTON (AP). — The president of the Union of Rabbis of Latin America, Abraham Haraberg, said on Wednesday that President Salvador Allende of Chile has sent a letter to the Kremlin appealing for freedom for Soviet Jews.

"I thought it was a very nice gesture," said Rabbi Haraberg, who met with Mr. Allende during a recent visit to Chile.

"Allende genuinely believes in freedom of religion and in his letter he expressed concern over the treatment of Jews in the Soviet Union," he said.

Rabbi Haraberg, a Polish-born American citizen whose home base is in Mexico, said there is full religious freedom throughout Latin America, Cuba included.

"As a matter of fact, the Cuban Government subsidizes three synagogues and a kosher restaurant," he said.

He estimated the total Jewish population in Latin America at 1 million and said about half of them are in Argentina. He said there are only four rabbis born in Latin America — one each in Argentina, Brazil, Mexico and Uruguay.

Asked about reports of repression of Jews in Argentina, Rabbi Haraberg said anti-Semitic groups do exist in that country, but the government is against them.

"These kind of groups exist in every country, but what matters is the official government position," he said.

The rabbi, who also is chairman of the International Committee for Religious Freedom, an interfaith group, said his purpose in coming to Washington is to dispel rumours that the Mexican Government is moving toward the left.

He said reports of this tendency have been widespread since Mexican President Luis Echeverria invited Allende to visit the country.

J.D.L. threat to Arab in Paris alleged

PARIS. — The General Union of Palestinian Students in France urged Palestinian students living in Europe yesterday not to allow themselves to be provoked by the Jewish Defence League.

A statement claimed that the League had sent a threatening note to one of the union's leaders on Wednesday.

It also claimed that the J.D.L. had sent threatening messages to Wee Zeuter, a Palestinian who was shot dead in Rome last month, a few days before his death.

The union warned Arabs and Palestinians to be vigilant and not to allow themselves to be provoked in a conflict that is not being pursued on the European scene.

The statement by the Palestinian Union declined to name "the threatened man" for security reasons, but said a note in French had been placed in his car reading: "The Jewish Defence League is everywhere."

"Our man in Paris has the impression that he is being followed, and we have informed the police," the union said.

Bolivia declares siege; charges conspiracy

LA PAZ (UPI). — President Hugo Banzer declared a state of siege in Bolivia early yesterday and announced the arrest of some extremist leaders believed to be at the "centre of a conspiracy." Troops have been stationed in the industrial area of northern La Paz and at key points elsewhere in the city, a government statement said.

Banzer, a right-wing army colonel, declared the state of siege after a meeting at his home with his cabinet and the head of the armed forces.

The government announcement said that "vicious and senseless elements have undertaken an effort to bring about rebellion and negative attitudes among some groups of the people."

A state of siege gives authorities the right of arrest without court order, suspends the need for search warrants and limits other civil liberties.

The declaration came one day after industrial workers in the capital went on a 24-hour strike, reportedly to protest a statement on Wednesday by Interior Minister Col. Mario Adelt Zamora about "extremist interference in the workers' unions."

Jordan officer said assaulted in Lebanon

AMMAN (Reuter). — A Jordanian officer declared persona non grata in Lebanon on Wednesday and sent here from Beirut had been "beaten and wounded in the head," a Government Spokesman said here.

The spokesman said that Lieut. Hisham Laili Yusef, Assistant Military Attaché in the Beirut Embassy, had been returned at the request of the Jordanian authorities.

Yusef was seized on Sunday night while allegedly passing explosives and a timing device to a Jordanian accomplice outside a seafaring hotel. He was "arrested by armed elements in co-operation with Lebanese security men and was beaten and wounded in the head," the spokesman said.

(A Lebanese government statement said Lieut. Yusef had been injured slightly when he attempted to escape.)

A report from Beirut says that the Jordanian Military Attaché, Brigadier Sanaq Jum'at has been recalled to Amman to provide clarification on the case involving Lieut. Yusef.

Beirut press reports said Brigadier Jum'at would not be returning to his post and that his recall was at the request of the Lebanese Government in view of his being directly responsible for Lieut. Yusef.

The reports also said that the Lebanese Government had expressed the desire that two other unnamed Jordanian officials be withdrawn from Lebanon because of the explosive incident.

Belfast man shot dead while walking dog

BELFAST (UPI). — Gunmen shot dead a Roman Catholic walking with his dog early yesterday in an apparent reprisal for the murder of a Protestant in the same area on Wednesday, the police said yesterday.

William Chivers, a 48-year-old labourer, was the third man to have been murdered in Northern Ireland within 48 hours. He fell dead after being hit by four shots outside his home.

The two latest killings brought to 89 the number of people who have died in three years of Ulster violence.

In Dublin, the Government has asked Parliament to pass a bill giving courts in the Irish Republic more freedom to take action against the outlawed Irish Republican Army (I.R.A.). The move followed the arrest in Dublin on Sunday of Sean MacStiofain, leader of the I.R.A.'s extremist Provisional Wing.

The bill would shift much of the onus from the state to an accused I.R.A. member to prove he was not in the organization.

Tight security at Jerusalem Fair in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (UPI). — An Israeli cultural fair commemorating the birth of the Jewish State 25 years ago opened to large crowds on Wednesday with cadres of off-duty police hired to thwart possible violence.

Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek hoisted the flag to open the fair.

Tight security prevailed at the start of the 11-day Jerusalem Fair, and crowds attending the downtown convention centre had to pass through an airport-type metal detector before entering.

U.S. Jews to boycott Pepsi over Soviet deal

LOS ANGELES (AP). — A pending business agreement between PepsiCo Inc. and the Soviet Union has prompted a boycott of the firm by two local groups in sympathy with Soviet Jews.

The California Students for Soviet Jewry said consumers will be asked to refrain from buying Pepsi Cola and other goods produced by any firm "which chooses to engage in trade with the Soviet Union while they hold our brothers for ransom."

The Southern California Council for Soviet Jewry, said the two local groups would work with hundreds of other organizations to "make the boycott national in scope."

Mitterrand links France to abortive Guinea coup

DAKAR, Senegal (UPI). — French Socialist leader François Mitterrand said Wednesday in a Radio Conakry broadcast monitored here that Portugal, France and other big powers were responsible for the abortive coup in Guinea two years ago.

Speaking at ceremonies marking the anniversary of the abortive seaborne attack by mercenaries helped by local dissidents, Mitterrand said "Portugal wasn't alone. Many other imperialist countries, including ours, have more or less directly or indirectly participated."

Mitterrand said Guinea was right in voting for independence from France in 1958, thus rejecting the late President Charles de Gaulle's constitutional referendum creating a French community of nations.

President Ahmed Sékou Touré of Guinea, in a parallel speech, said de Gaulle had ignored three offers of cooperation made by Guinea after she had opted out of the French community.

Toure said difficulties met by Guinea after independence were due to France "who has abandoned Guinea."

Toure said 14 Guinean ministers, all of them high army officers, have been put on trial on charges of conspiracy after the November 1970 coup.

WOMEN. — For the first time in the history of the South African navy, women are to be enrolled with the same status, same pay and same prospect of promotion as men, the director of naval administration, Commodore J.C. Goosen, announced yesterday.

Texas farmers claim cheating in wheat sales to Soviet AMARILLO (AP). — Five wheat farmers have filed a suit claiming that a conspiracy between six grain companies and a government official in the American wheat to the Soviet Union has cost Texas farmers $60m. in payments for their crop.

American grain companies sold more than 400 million bushels of wheat to the Soviets during July and August.

Named in the suit, filed on Wednesday, were Continental Grain Co., Bunge Corp. and Garac Grain Co., all of New York; Cook Industries of Memphis, Tennessee; Louis Dreyfus Co., of New York; and Cargill Inc. of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Also named in the petition is Clarence Palmby, Formerly Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for International Affairs and Commodity Programmes, who is now a vice-president of Continental Grain Co.

"This is very similar to a proceeding suit" said Bryan Poff, the farmers' attorney. "We believe that Palmby and others who had knowledge of these impending wheat sales to Russia told certain grain operators and conspired not to let anyone else know. Most of our farmers sold their wheat in June for $1.35 to $1.44 (per bushel) and in August, when the sale was known, the price jumped to $1.50 and on up to nearly $2.50."

Poff said wheat growers in Texas and other early harvest states were hurt more than those in the south further north, because the southern crop had been harvested long before word of the huge sale leaked out.

Turks dissolve all student organizations

ANKARA (AP). — The Turkish legislature passed a law Wednesday night dissolving all existing student organizations. The law was sent to President Cevdet Sunay for signature.

Extremist student groups were blamed for campus violence and civil disruption which led to proclamation of martial law in 11 Turkish provinces in April 1971.

The law will allow one new student organization to be set up at each school or faculty. The new organizations are forbidden to engage in political activity and must have their headquarters off campus.

The new law also forbids foundation of any organization based on "race, language, class, religion or sect." Organizations are forbidden to use names, symbols, slogans in favour of or against national socialism, Communism or anarchism.

Car crash costs Dane his seat in parliament

COPENHAGEN (AP). — In a state of shock and grief, former Minister of Fisheries A.C. Normann on Wednesday became the third member of Denmark's Folketing (parliament) in 123 years to hear the Speaker order him to leave the assembly and never come back.

In a vote that split the Social-Democratic government and all the parties right down the middle, the Folketing voted 88 to 70, with five abstentions, to declare Normann, a 68-year-old Social Liberal, unworthy of preserving the Folketing seat he held for 22 years.

The vote followed one hour of sometimes passionate debate for and against expelling Normann on the grounds that he is under sentence to serve 30 days in prison for negligent homicide in an auto crash which killed two people, crippled a child and seriously injured a fourth.

Normann, who drove his official car at a speed of 128 kph. at the moment of the crash, was expelled from the Folketing on the basis of a constitutional article applied only two times previously, in 1873 and 1967.

In the latter case a member from the Faroe Islands was voted out after a court sentenced him to 40 days in prison for violation of bank laws.

Only a week after the auto crash in September last year Normann, who was seriously injured himself, was re-elected to the Folketing by his constituency while he was still in hospital. Since then he has fought bitterly to retain his seat.

But after Wednesday's vote and the Speaker's pronouncement that he must leave the assembly at once, Normann got up, emptied his small desk of personal belongings and walked out of one of the longest careers in Danish politics while his former colleagues watched in deep silence.

EAST AND WEST BEGIN TALKS ON SECURITY

HELSINKI (UPI). — Diplomats from East and West got down to work on a European Security Conference yesterday.

The 34 ambassadors from the U.S., Canada and 33 European countries met for 75 minutes to begin preparatory talks on a full security conference, expected to be held some time next year.

The real business — whether and when to hold the conference and what it should discuss — is to be handled here over the next few months. For the moment, the 34 nations will be busy jockeying for position.

Rumania, the maverick of the Soviet bloc, took the floor to complain that its ambassador, Mircea Balanescu, had not been allowed to speak at Wednesday's ceremonial opening. Balanescu said yesterday that he had wanted to underline the "equality" of all nations by establishing a rotating vice-chairmanship.

"This (his silencing on Wednesday) is unprecedented in international affairs," the ambassador raged. More privately, to Western diplomats, he said that "it is undemocratic."

France argued against establishing any written rules for the meeting, and also against any official briefings for the press. France also expressed opposition to any working groups being appointed by the meeting to hammer out an agenda for the full conference.

The purpose, according to spokesmen, was to make the meeting as informal as possible. Under this method, a decision on what to put before the full conference would be taken if no country was strongly opposed to it.

If a country registered strong opposition, then the decision would be dropped.

In effect, this gave every one of the 34 nations a veto. Western spokesmen said they hoped to avoid a Soviet veto of the key Western proposals on "free movement of people and ideas" by a mixture of bargaining and threats of propaganda defeats. "We just hope they (the Soviets) won't want to take the onus for shooting down popular proposals," one spokesman said. "Actually, consensus is the only way to proceed — and it often works well."

A Finnish diplomat, Dr. Rikard Toettermann, was elected chairman of the meeting, but the question of a vice-chairman was deferred.

Countries of both the East and West blocs — Poland and East Germany, for instance — opposed the idea of a rotating vice-chairmanship. France said there should be no vice-chairman at all, and it appeared likely that this idea would prevail.

Labour troubles again hit Italy

ROME (Reuter). — Government ministries and law courts were paralyzed for the second successive day yesterday, and thousands of building workers stopped work in the latest round of autumn labour troubles to hit Italy's weakened economy and central administration.

In Sicily, schools were shut by a teachers' walkout, 350,000 agricultural workers struck to back demands for a renewal of labour contracts and agricultural reforms, and Sicilian construction workers walked out.

But the worst blow to the government of Premier Giulio Andreotti, already troubled by economic difficulties, came from 300,000 state employees staging the second day of a 48-hour strike.

Union sources claimed 85-90 per cent of state employees joined the walkout on Wednesday.

Yesterday they again shut down all government ministries except the Education Ministry, closed tax offices and reduced staff at frontier customs posts to a minimum. Big queues of trucks were building up at the Brenner Pass into Austria. Italy's main road link with central Europe.

The strike also brought out law court officials, causing postponement of a large number of court cases.

The state employees are protesting the recent doubling of pay for top civil servants, and demanding a three-year labour contract system as in other sectors of the economy.

POLLUTION IS MOVING FASTER THAN THE CURES

By YA'ACOV ARDON
Jerusalem Post Reporter

"Man's environment is deteriorating faster as a result of pollution than his measures to stop it take effect... 20 years from now the fish in the Mediterranean and some other seas will no longer be edible because of the noxious chemicals now being poured into them... I saw in the Haifa area old rubber tyres being burnt in fuel. People see only the black smoke, but don't know that it also contains particles that cause cancer. I also passed a cement plant which operates without dust filters. In my country such a plant would not stay in operation for more than two days."

These disquieting observations come from a round-faced, soft-spoken, German scientist who has just paid his first visit to Israel.

Dr. Helmut Berge is one of the renowned experts on industrial pollution. He is the founder and director of a research institute near Dusseldorf and is accredited to West German courts as an expert on damage caused by industrial and mining operations.

He was invited here by the cultural centre attached to the German Embassy and lectured to health officials, technologists, urbanologists and others concerned with the protection of our environment, including faculty members of the Technion which now has a course on environmental engineering.

One of Dr. Berge's innovations is the use of "indicator plants" to warn against pollution in cities and rural areas. "Plant analysis is indispensable, as examination of leaves will reveal how far pollution has progressed. The U.S., Germany and Sweden now have stiff laws and standards on protecting environment. We have a very large lime and cement plant in the North Rhine-Westphalia district, for example, but a hundred metres from it the air is clean. The dust problem is the earliest to solve."

Dr. Berge is more optimistic for developing countries — if they take timely precautions to protect their environment — than for the older, industrialized countries where the problem has been diagnosed too late.

PREFER PROGRESS

But he cites official spokesmen of Brazil, Tunisia and India as saying that if they have to choose between industrialization and neglect of environmental protection, they prefer the economic progress. However, there is not even adequate action in many advanced countries. The recent U.N. conference in Stockholm on pollution produced only meagre results. "Destruction outruns protective measures," Dr. Berge says. Dr. Berge produces frightening figures on the rate at which destruction proceeds. "If one regards the entire period in which our globe with all its fauna and flora has evolved as having lasted one year, then the development of our motor traffic can be said to have taken place in 12 seconds. All our petroleum will be used up in 28 seconds."

Refuse, dust, sulphur dioxide, and other poisonous chemicals are terrorists who threaten the quality of human life.

"Life can be pleasant and worth living only in a healthy environment... You here in Israel should avoid the mistakes of Los Angeles. You will have to guard against the dangers of advancing industrialization, of rising traffic, of noise... You need more testing stations. You have humid air along the coast. Some gases emitted by industry may in themselves be harmless, but when they combine with a certain degree of moisture in the air, they can be dangerous."

Plants, shrubs and trees can not only warn of pollution danger, but also help clean the air and reduce noise. However, the most pressing need is for legislative action.

West Germany, he says, has adopted the "causation principle" in fighting pollution. Whoever causes damage to the environment is held legally and financially responsible.

Dangers in illuminated signs, study reveals

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA — KEEP away from illuminated fluorescent publicity signs — popularly known as neon signs — or from the steel pylons to which many of them are attached. They are apt to be faulty, without earthing, and if something goes wrong, anyone touching the pylon or any other metal part linked with the sign runs the risk of electrocution.

An investigation by Development Ministry engineer Victor Suss in the Haifa area has revealed that many of the signs have been defective from the start, installed by electrical firms which disregard the safety regulations — a fact of which the people who buy the signs are generally ignorant. The Ministry and the police are now trying to decide which is to prosecute the offenders.

The investigation began after the Paul Lamberg publicity agency, which ordered many of the signs from contractors, complained to the police, the Ministry and the Electric Corporation. In order to make their prices competitive, the contractors in question had installed signs without condensers (which adjust inequalities of voltage in the electricity supply), often without earthing.

The Electric Corporation spokesman explained that it did not supervise or check the installation of publicity signs. If a contractor submitted a plan, the company's experts checked and approved it, but nobody was obliged to submit a plan.

NO STAFF

The Development Ministry spokesman explained that its own office responsible for supervising electrical installations and equipment did not have the staff to check electric signs throughout the country. It arranged for the training and licensing of electricians, who were expected to comply with all the safety regulations. If they violated them, they could be prosecuted and have their licences withdrawn. The spokesman admitted that the Development Ministry could not prevent unlicensed persons from installing signs and that it lacked means of enforcing the safety regulations against them.

It appears that unscrupulous contractors have, perhaps for years, been taking advantage of this loophole. The Ministry is entitled to issue administrative orders forbidding the use of dangerous electric installations or equipment; but is apparently at a loss as to how it can take action to protect the public in the case of faulty publicity signs.

Experts say that to make the faulty signs throughout the country conform to statutory safety standards would cost a vast amount. While the offending firms now face prosecution for criminal negligence, the question remains: which public agency is going to enforce the safety regulations?

Forty daily and 10 weekly newspapers from around the world are on sale at the combined newsstand-post office of the Canada Club, a comprehensive student facility dedicated yesterday on Hebrew University's Mount Scopus campus. The newsstand is acclaimed by its manager, Mr. David Kuschel, to be "the most diversified in all of Israel." Before coming to Israel two years ago, Mr. Kuschel operated what he says was the most variegated newsstand in New York City, on Union Square. Canada Club, established by the Hadasah-Wizo Organization of Canada, is situated on the lower slopes of the campus dormitory area where some 3,000 students live. The facility also offers on its ground floor a cultural centre and on the upper floor, a modern supermarket.

Danish Jews in row over rabbi

By ERNIE MEYER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Jewish community of Copenhagen is in an uproar over remarks by Denmark's Chief Rabbi Bent Melchior following a memorial service for the victims of the Munich Olympics massacre.

Rabbi Melchior, who is in Jerusalem for the convention of the World Council of Synagogues, said yesterday that following the service he told journalists that he thought Denmark should recall its ambassadors on prolonged leaves from countries giving shelter to terrorists. Denmark should also cut off its aid to such nations and curtail cultural relations with them.

The interview made headlines in the Danish press which said the rabbi wanted Denmark to sever diplomatic relations with the countries concerned. Rabbi Melchior said yesterday that the Danish Foreign Minister even appeared on television to deny such plans.

Following the incident the Copenhagen Jewish community was rent between those who supported the rabbi and those who thought that he had overstepped the bounds of rabbinic leadership.

Rabbi Melchior told The Post that just before leaving for Israel he handed his resignation to the community leaders as a result of the controversy. He added, however, that since a new board of regents was being elected in his absence, he might find a changed situation upon his return. "I may arrive at a new modus vivendi with them and carry on in my position," he said. (Rabbi Melchior's late father was Denmark's Chief Rabbi for many years, with the son taking over upon his death.)

In Denmark, the Chief Rabbi is considered the spokesman of Jewry, that is why his remarks occasioned such controversy. Rabbi Melchior explained. He added that with two brothers and a sister living in Israel and his oldest son studying at a yeshiva here, "my ally is a very real possibility."

German priest says Israel should 'show restraint'

By H. BEN-AMI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

BEERSHEBA. A visiting West German clergyman said here on Wednesday that although Israel was justified in defending itself against acts of terrorism, this week's "attack against Syria" was regrettable, because innocent civilians were hurt. The visitor, Dr. Kurt Scharf, head of the Evangelical Church of Berlin-Brandenburg, was speaking to a group of Negev University students. Dr. Scharf said Israel should show more restraint and "political wisdom" to strengthen the hands of moderate Arabs. "Brute force will not bring peace any nearer," he said. He added that Israel should not have to return to the pre-1967 borders. Dr. Scharf said his church had joined the world protest against the Soviet ransom tax, and that he and other church leaders had met with the Soviet Ambassador in Bonn on the subject.

MODEST CONDUCTOR

The Israel Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra, Paul Capolongo, conductor; David Chen, violin; Jerusalem Theatre, November 21. Program: Classical Symphony; Martin: Viola Concerto; Alexander: "Nabab" (Concerto); Tchaikovsky: "Romeo and Juliet."

As in the two previous concerts with the guest conductor, that they like working with him. The collective sound was fresh and lively, with the ring of true collaboration. Capolongo makes music unostentatiously and does not try to impose his personality on the music; he is concerned exclusively with translating the score into sound. In the Classical Symphony he did not overtax the ability of the musicians. He adopted a moderate tempo in the first movement, but in the finale he accelerated into breathtaking speed turning the sparkling passages into a brilliant display of orchestral virtuosity.

Frank Martin's Viola Concerto of 1951 also gives an orchestra opportunity to contribute to the impression of the work, and the instrumental climaxes were masterfully built up. David Chen performed his sole part with diligence and faultless reliability. But what I miss, time and again, in his playing is quality of tone. There is no flexibility of colour, no warmth of expression, no vibrating life. The lack of these characteristics bar complete enjoyment of Chen's considerable technical achievements.

Haim Alexander originally wrote Nabab ("Stick" in Arabic) for the Inbal Dance Theatre but, for once, a score composed for dancing stood on its own merits in the concert hall. Only eleven instruments participate (woodwinds, trumpet, doublebass and two percussionists), and the scope of sound and tone mixtures is always within the realm of chamber music. The music is strongly oriental in colour and character though it never degenerates into cliché. Rhythm is ever present in the background, lending tension and propelling force to the developments, but the treatment of the percussion group avoids domination or over-exertion, a failure of so many composers. The effect of the piece is immediate and sustained.

Paul Capolongo brought the concerto to an end with Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet," another of those works whose weight and quality is diminished by too many hearings. The performance was totally satisfying, and conductor and orchestra alike shared in the warm reception accorded them by the audience. YOHANAN BOEHM

Computer can help, but doctor decides

By MACABEE DEAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The computer can provide valuable diagnostic aid to the physician — but it is the doctor himself who must make the vital decisions. This was stated yesterday by Dr. Gary Rosenberg, of Rothchild Hospital in Haifa, who with the help of the Technion staff, has drawn up a "differential diagnostic programme" to help diagnose patients admitted to the hospital in a coma. He was speaking at the eighth data processing conference being held at the Hilton Hotel.

Dr. Rosenberg, a physician, said the computer was limited by the information the doctor fed it. Doctors would stress different symptoms and findings depending on their education.

Another factor was that different doctors, due to different systems of education, used different terminology. Moreover, the computer lacked "common sense" and "intuition" and the best diagnosis consisted of a combination of factual findings backed up with a highly developed intuitive sense. Nevertheless, with all its drawbacks, the computer could provide the physician with a wealth of factual information, thus allowing him to speed up his own diagnosis. For example, as soon as the patient in a coma was admitted (a comatose patient was selected since the patient himself could provide little information, thus forcing the doctor to relate mainly to outward physical symptoms), the physical findings were fed into the computer. It would reply that it seemed that the cause of the coma could be due to several causes, and advise that certain tests be performed. On the basis of the results of these tests, the computer would make certain other suggestions as to the ailment, and suggest further tests.

Dr. Fred Wiener, of the Technion, who used a computer to tabulate the different types of blood donors to Magen David Adom, noted that the most frequent blood type in Israel, according to a survey of 50,000 donors, was "A" with 34.9 per cent; followed by "O" with 31.5 per cent; "B" with 16.8 per cent and "AB" with 7.3 per cent. All these are Rh plus and thus 90.5 per cent of Israelis have Rh plus blood. The remainder consists of Rh minus blood, the rarest in Israel, with only 0.6 per cent of the people having it.

Moscow artist's works to be shown here

TEL AVIV. — Deputy Prime Minister Yigal Alon on Sunday will open an exhibition of oils and drawings by the Moscow painter Nathan Feingold at the Artists' House in Jerusalem. Feingold, who has not yet been allowed to leave Russia, has sent a message to the opening, stating he discovered his "essential Judaism" when he began painting. Art, he says, is "basically national" and could not develop outside its natural cultural environment.

A communications engineer who was on the team that worked on the Soviet satellites programme, Feingold, 43, quit his work in 1966 and waited the statutory five-year period for persons connected with security projects before applying for permission to go to Israel. However, he has so far been refused an exit visa. His wife's papers are in Israel. When Nobel Prize laureate Heinrich Heine was in Moscow several years ago, he called on Feingold and acquired a painting from him. An exhibition of Feingold's work at the Moscow University in 1967 won laudatory notices in the Soviet press. Feingold uses Jewish themes in his works, including Hebrew characters. The exhibition is being arranged under the auspices of the National Council for Soviet Jewry.

PROPAGANDA VICTORY FOR U.K. PRO-ARAB LOBBYISTS

By DAVID LENNON
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

LONDON. — The pro-Arab lobby in Britain has just scored a propaganda victory which will never be about in public, but it is all the more effective for that. They have managed to get their views on the Arab-Israeli dispute published in a commentary in an authoritative and hitherto impartial yearbook.

The weighty "Middle East and North Africa" reference book is published by Europa here in London in a new edition every year. This year, for the first time, the book carries introductory essays by what it calls "acknowledged experts" who attempt to analyse the problems which face the region.

The first of these essays is written by Lord Canadian, British Ambassador to the U.N. some years back, and one of the architects of Security Council resolution 242. His essay outlines what he believes is a possible solution to the impasse. Setting out what he considers are essential for peace, it never purports to be more than one man's opinion.

The two articles which follow are, however, intended to be objective analyses of the situation in the Middle East. Unfortunately, the editor chose a known partisan of the Arab viewpoint to tell us about "The Arab-Israeli Confrontation 1967-72" and "The Jerusalem Issue."

The section to which Michael Adams, whose pro-Arab stance is well known, to write these articles is extraordinary. Mr. Adams is the full-time, salaried information officer of the Council for the Advancement of Arab-British Understanding.

SELECTIVE

CAAABU is the pro-Arab lobby here which includes among its members Christopher Mayhew, M.P., who is noted for defending Arab actions and attacking Israel in and out of the House of Commons.

Adams' first essay is a long and selectively detailed record of events since the end of the Six Day War, as seen through the eyes of one who believes that Israel is responsible for the conflict in the area.

He starts off by relating that the 1967 war meant that "the conflict had been complicated by the occupation of Arab territory, the displacement of more refugees, and the aggravation of the sense of grievance felt by the Palestinians."

The war is referred to as a "disaster" or "catastrophic" in its effect on the Arabs. The fact that it was forced upon Israel and that it had the effect of removing the house which was around Israel's neck are not noted. He tells how Israeli shelling along the Suez Canal led to evacuation of the population and destruction of the towns, but omits to say who was responsible for the start and continuation of that mini-war.

Throughout the eight-page article, Adams is at pains to prove his contention that the main stumbling block to peace in the region is Israel's declared intention to retain large parts of the occupied territories.

In the second essay, Adams drops all pretence at presenting an objective study of "The Jerusalem Issue." It is simply a polemic, a denunciation of the annexation of the Arab part of the city. He records all the U.N. resolutions which criticized the annexation and any other item which he can drag in to prove this action wrong.

The reader is told about the concern felt by Christians and Moslems for the fate of the city. No mention is made of the concern of Judaism for the city which is the centre-piece of Jewish historical and religious aspiration.

As an added bonus for the pro-Arabists, another member of CAAABU, Mr. Tom Little, was given the task of writing the history of Israel in the "country surveys" section of the book.

ERRORS OF FACT

Sticking to a fairly straightforward recording of the history of modern Israel, Little's greatest fault lies not so much in the way his text is slanted as in his errors of fact. He falls down on points like writing that Ben-Gurion "emerged from retirement to become Minister of Defence early in 1967." He also informs us that the three millionth Jew arrived in Israel early in 1972.

This error is pointed up in the statistical survey a few pages further on which shows that at the end of 1971 there were over 400,000 non-Jewish citizens in a population close to three million.

I spoke to the publishers, Europa Publications, and asked them if they believed that Adams and Little, openly and avowed supporters of the Arab cause, were the most objective "experts" they could have found to write these sections.

"It is our opinion that the articles present the objective picture which we wish to present. Taking the articles in their own context we believe them to be reasonable for our purposes," the officially approved reply stated.

They were only prepared to apologize for the fact that a few favourable words from a review which The Jerusalem Post gave the 1970/71 edition is reprinted on the dust jacket, without any reference to the fact that it was a review of a previous edition. This, they told me, will be corrected in future.

Ali nursing his first cut

FORMER heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali was left nursing a cut eye Tuesday night after battering Bob Foster, the world light heavyweight titleholder, into an eighth round knock out in Slateline Nevada.

Foster, 19 kilos lighter than Ali, went crazing to the canvas six times for counts of eight before he was finally dispatched with a long-right-handed pile-driver 40 seconds into the eighth round of the 12-round bout.

But Foster, Ali's sixth victim this year, succeeded in cutting the ex-champion's face — something Ali boasted had never happened to him before in his professional career.

All's doctor said the cut Foster opened up under the left eyebrow in the fifth round would require stitches.

The fight took place in the unusual setting of the High Sierra nightclub of the Sahara-Tahoe Hotel. Nearly 1,700 fans sat around sipping drinks in the plush red booths of the nightclub.

All, dabbing an ice-bag to his cut eye after the fight and looking weary, predicted his next match could be with European heavyweight champion Joe Bugner of Britain. He is still seeking a re-match with Joe Frazier, holder of the world heavyweight crown.

All was full of praise for Foster's game attempt to deal with overwhelming odds. "Frazier never could hit me the way Foster hit me tonight," Ali declared.

But to the crowd, watching Ali go in for clowning pats with his gloves in the third round and staging a comic impression of sagging at the knees in the seventh, it sometimes appeared that Ali was carrying his opponent and they did not like it.

All explained this afterwards by saying it was part of his strategy. "He didn't know I was as fast as I was and I didn't know he was as good as he was."

Foster, looking about as dejected as Ali as the two sat side by side backstage being interviewed, said he would like a re-match, "if he gives me one."

Asked what had happened to the deadly left-hook, which has kept him undisputed light heavyweight champion since 1968, Foster said: "I didn't get a chance to put it in."

All, who had predicted last week he would finish Foster in eight rounds but cut the prediction to five on the day of the fight, made a determined effort to finish it at the end of the fifth round.

"I thought I had 30 seconds to take him," said Ali, who put Foster down seconds before the bell, then dived around him as if the fight was finished.

PRO FOOTBALL

Stung by the Atlanta Falcons quick 10-0 lead, the Washington Redskins, behind Larry Brown's running and Bill Kimer's passing, roared back to a 24-13 National Football League victory over the Falcons Monday night.

RUGBY

The New Zealand rugby union team suffered its second defeat this tour and the first ever against an English provincial side when they were beaten 18-14 on Wednesday by North West Counties, in Worthington.

North West scored a goal, a penalty, a dropped goal and a try against two penalty goals and two tries by the All Blacks. Only four Welsh clubs, apart from National sides, have registered victories since the first New Zealand Tour in 1903. The All Blacks were beaten previously this tour by Llandelli of Wales.

SOCCER

England forward Kevin Keegan scored in the last minute to give Liverpool a 1-0 victory over Leeds United in their football league cup fourth round replay at Leeds Wednesday.

The match looked certain to go into extra time until Keegan headed the winner from a corner conceded by former England defender Jack Charlton. Liverpool will meet Tottenham Hotspur in the quarter-finals.

Chelsea moved into the semi-finals of the competition by beating third division Notts County 3-1 with Peter Osgood scoring both for and against Chelsea. His second half own goal gave Notts County a fleeting hope of springing an upset but Chelsea slammed in a third goal to clinch their victory.

On Tuesday night a hat-trick by Graham Paddon gave Norwich City a 3-0 win over Arsenal in their quarter-final.

Two of Paddon's goals were the result of bad errors by Arsenal goalkeeper Geoff Barmet but Norwich were worth the win which sent them further along the road to repeating their 1962 league cup triumph.

In the other quarter-final on Tuesday Blackpool fought well to take a 1-1 draw away to Wolverhampton Wanderers and force a replay. Keith Dyson put Blackpool ahead in the 85th minutes before Wolves replied eight minutes later through Jim McCallin.

International defender John Brownlie scored the 72nd minute goal which earned Hibernian a 1-0 victory over Rangers and a place in the final of the Scottish League Cup against either Celtic or Aberdeen.

HASHISH SMUGGLING AND ORANGES, HERB CURES AND BANK ROBBERY

By HENRIETTA BOAS
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

ALTHOUGH bank robberies and drug smuggling are everyday events in Holland today, a recent example of each of them, one involving a drug-running band of Pakistanis and the other a herbal cure doctor who got away with a million guilders, merit special attention.

Amsterdam narcotics police this month unmasked the largest conspiracy of hashish smugglers ever to be discovered in Holland. Ten Pakistani men and an Englishwoman have been arrested so far, and further arrests are expected.

They belonged to an organization which, using a bogus Pakistani import firm, smuggled at least 4,000 kilograms of hashish worth about two million guilders into Holland.

The hashish was hidden in skilfully hollowed out boards of crates filled with oranges, small woodcraft elephants, and onyx ashtrays and small boxes, which the firm imported from Pakistan. The narcotics police started its investigation several months ago when large quantities of narcotics were circling on the Amsterdam drug market, the origin of which could not be traced.

The police got their first clue when someone reported that a Pakistani import firm, without a fixed address in Holland and without permanent storerooms, was importing crates with oranges from Pakistan by air, though the air freight was much higher than the sum that could be realized by the sale of the oranges.

42 KILOS

Eventually a 32-year-old Persian technician with a Pakistani passport was arrested. He was found with 42 kilograms of hash, and also documents showing he was connected with a Pakistani import firm.

This led to the arrest the same day of two other Pakistanis temporarily living in Amsterdam, who, in addition to Pakistani oranges, also imported woodcraft and onyx objects. They were found to have hired storerooms in various basements in and around the city, often for only a week. There, they emptied the crates, threw away their oranges, smashed the objects — and prepared the hashish for sale. Each crate contained about 2½ kilograms, and each innocent elephant about one pound. There must have been at least 20 to 30 air shipments of 35 crates each, police estimated.

When two further Pakistanis went to the airport to collect some other crates of oranges that had arrived from Pakistan, they too were arrested, and their arrest led to that of the master mind, including the Englishwoman, who had been living in an Amsterdam hotel. The arrests came minutes before they were due to have left the hotel; their suitcases were already downstairs at the reception.

On Thursday, November 9, he phoned his bank manager to say that he wanted to change a large sum of foreign currency, to the value of a million guilders. He explained he did not want to go to the bank carrying such a large amount, for fear he might be robbed, and therefore asked the manager to send two employees to his home early next morning, with the required amount.

On arrival at the herb doctor's bungalow next morning, one employee remained in the car, while the other went inside with the money. The herb doctor offered him a cup of coffee — and while the clerk was drinking, Mr. van de Moosdijk struck him unconscious with a rubber hammer, grabbed the Dutch money, and quickly jumped into a car in front of the house, driven by his brother. Before the other employee realized what had happened, the two men had driven off. Within a few minutes they were probably across the Belgian border.

Four days after his disappearance, the herb doctor was arrested in his own home, to which he had surreptitiously returned during the night, although it was surrounded by a police cordon.

The police had been tipped off by a man with whom the doctor had spent part of the previous night, and with whom he had left a sum of money. The doctor's home had been cordoned off by the police who had learned that the herb doctor could not live without his wife and children, and never left his home for more than a day or two.

The money, however, is still missing and so is the doctor's brother. The doctor told police that he had hidden the one million guilders in banknotes "somewhere in the woods," but he has forgotten exactly where.

In increasing numbers, people who had tried everything to regain their health made the pilgrimage to Mr. van de Moosdijk's bungalow to be cured by him. In his sitting room, sitting under a life-size portrait of the local bishop, he told those consulting him that they could be completely cured by regularly using herbs he would supply them — at a price.

At the height of his career, he used 22 delivery vans to take parcels of herbs to his clients up and down the Netherlands, Belgium, and in France and West Germany. However, two or three years ago a former "patient" of Mr. van de Moosdijk went on TV to complain that he had lost nearly all his money by paying for herbs which had not cured him — and had prevented him from consulting a doctor while there was still time.

More complaints followed; people lost confidence in the "herb doctor" until he was declared bankrupt. He was arrested and sentenced to some months' imprisonment for swindling.

Nevertheless, he continued his practice, though on a smaller scale, in particular in Belgium and France. As a result, he often was sent large sums of foreign currency, which he changed into Dutch currency at an Eindhoven bank.

Off-shore airfield in Tel Aviv

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — A tender for the reclamation of some 900 dunam of land from the sea off the Tel Aviv coast is to be published in about a fortnight by Atarim, the joint Municipal-Governmental company for the development of the sea shore here.

Some ten companies from abroad as well as six or seven local contractors are expected to bid on the tender. Part of the reclaimed land is to be parallel to the coast near the "L" Plan area to serve as an internal-flights landing strip. This would make possible closure of the Side Dov airfield, which hampers the development of the "L" Plan area and is a nuisance to residents already living there.

The plan for a landing-strip in the sea however is controversial and has yet to win Government approval, with the final decision expected in four months.

The tender is being published beforehand to enable planners to estimate the cost of the project and the time needed to complete it. Initial estimates are that the off-the-coast landing strip would cost internal-flights landing strip. This would make possible closure of the Side Dov airfield, which hampers

SELLING TO THE 'JEWISH MARKET' — FOR AND AGAINST

Mr. Fainerman

By AARON SETNER
 Jerusalem Post Reporter

If a little bit of Jewish sentiment can help sell Israel's goods abroad, that sentiment should be exploited. That's the view of Mr. Uzi Fainerman, M.K., and his position will carry considerable weight when the matter comes up in the Knesset.

For months now Mr. Fainerman has been heading the Knesset Economic Committee's "Subcommittee on the Jewish Market." In an effort to bolster exports to North America (which have been leveling off recently), the subcommittee has been looking into the so-called "Jewish market" in the U.S. to help sustain the volume of shipments to America.

Mr. Fainerman's subcommittee meets on Monday for its summing-up session. It will probably recommend that the Government, the Jewish Agency, selected exporters and interested Jewish communities in the U.S. all join together in an experimental test marketing effort to find out once and for all what is the real potential of this "Jewish Market."

"I see nothing wrong with this," Mr. Fainerman told The Jerusalem Post earlier this week. "As matter of fact, I think playing up the Jewish aspect of our products has a value over and above the commercial side of things. I think it's good Zionism.

"Although I am a secular and have never lived abroad, I am kind that many of our pioneer settlers got their first taste of this land through the 'Jewish' products they received from Palestine. These items, such as Tu B'Shvat treats, would come in wrappers printed in Hebrew characters. This aroused curiosity and interest and — eventually — love and devotion for Eretz Israel. Now, I don't see why this couldn't happen today."

But Mr. Fainerman hastens to add: "On the other hand, I realize that Jewish identification with Israel's merchandise cannot and must not cover up for defective goods or bad service, such as false delivery dates. The products must arrive on the market in a competitive position, along with non-Israeli goods. From that point on, let the sentimental factor enter into the picture."

But some circles at the Ministry of Commerce and Industry scoff at the whole idea. "Any item that leaves this country must be able to stand on its own two feet" is the way a Ministry official put it to The Jerusalem Post recently. "Ethnic sentiment is fine, but you cannot build an economic basis on sentiment."

Even if the concept of a "Jewish market" were commercially viable, these circles believe, there would be the practical problem of marketing. They point to demographic studies that indicate a continuing dispersion of Jewish families in America. As years pass, more and more families leave the old concentrations of Jews and move to less densely populated areas. Therefore, pinpointing "Jewish markets" would become increasingly difficult.

Another problem is that all Israel food specialties are automatically relegated to the "Kosher Foods" sections, which attract a limited traffic — Jewish housewives who also happen to be interested in purchasing kosher foods. Ministry officials would rather see Israel products competing on the main shelves, along with Portuguese sardines, Formosan pineapple, Canadian salmon, Japanese tuna and Polish ham.

A related headache for the Ministry and its trade commissioners abroad is a well-attended practice common among the Jewish community centres in the U.S., Canada and Britain. There, as part of their supportive activities on behalf of Israel, "Israel Product Fairs" are held, at which imports — foods and other merchandise — are sold at ridiculously low prices.

Local merchants who carry Israel products sometimes complain to Israel trade officers that importers bypass them and sell directly to the organizers of these fairs. This leaves them (the shop owners) with piles of unsold Israel goods.

One Ministry official puts it this way: "Our aim should not be to locate Jewish customers for Israel products, but to convince them — in the normal channels of distribution."

Mapam: Tax returns should be published

By DAVID KRIVINE
 Jerusalem Post Economic Correspondent

FINANCE Minister Sapir has dropped the idea of publishing a list of everybody's tax returns — but Knesset Member Dov Zaklin, Mapam's spokesman on tax affairs, has not given up hope.

"It is necessary to supplement administrative sanctions by moral and social pressures," he told The Jerusalem Post last week. "People who live well will not want to be shown up before the public as paying a minute tax," he said.

This view is supported by a subcommittee (under Dr. Fanya Glinor) of the Asher Committee on Tax Reform. Its recommendation that tax lists be published will be studied by the plenum of the Asher committee at one of its coming meetings. Should the subcommittee's recommendation be adopted, this would create a confrontation with the Finance Minister — who is himself backed by tax experts in his Ministry.

They say that it takes time to complete assessments, particularly in questionable cases. An up-to-date list of all returns could be achieved only six years after the tax-year in question, by which time the information would be obsolete.

Mr. Zaklin believes it is necessary to make the fiscal authorities complete their assessments more quickly. "The next we get the figures ready in time for publication would help, he says.

Haifa couples protest price of apartments

By YA'ACOV ARDON
 Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA — Several dozen young couples demonstrated outside City Hall and then marched to Rehov Herzl yesterday afternoon in protest against the high cost of the flats being built for them by Shikun Ovdim in Rehov Euria, Neve Sha'an.

The demonstrators were part of a group of 500 couples who registered early in 1971 with the Municipality for public housing. In July 1971 the first 250 homes were distributed by lottery; the remaining couples were promised housing on the same terms — IL43,000 — "in a couple of months."

As time passed with no sign of action on the part of the Municipality, all but 112 of the 250 couples dropped out of the programme. "In May this year the Municipality told us the homes would cost IL51,000. Shikun Ovdim said IL55,350 — a price that was linked to the Cost-of-Building Index in October 1971, when it was still relatively low. Today the homes cost IL60,000 and are still linked. The company has another three years' time in which to give us the keys, and who knows what they will cost then," Rafael Ben Rafael, spokesman for the young couples, told The Post yesterday. (Shikun Ovdim is the Histadrut building-contracting firm.)

The couples also complain that their mortgage loans carry 11 per cent interest, while 8 per cent is the rate for new immigrant mortgages.

Some of the "newlyweds" were accompanied by their young children — an indication to the authorities and to the sympathetic on-lookers that they had indeed been waiting a long time.

More citrus fruit, Bill would control fewer hands in Gaza this year

Jerusalem Post Reporter

GAZA — Gaza Strip citrus growers expect this year's crop to reach nine million crates, one million more than last year.

Like last year, one-third of this year's crop is earmarked for Western Europe (through the Israel Citrus Marketing Board), one-third for Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, and the rest for Jordan and other Arab countries.

Local citrus growers face an acute labour shortage this year since most of the Gaza Strip labour force is employed in Israel. Unskilled workers are demanding IL12-15 per day, as compared with IL6 per day last year. Skilled workers are demanding as much as IL30 a day, it is learned.

Mini-golf, bowling alley proposed Sheraton to build hotel in Eilat

Jerusalem Post Economic Reporter

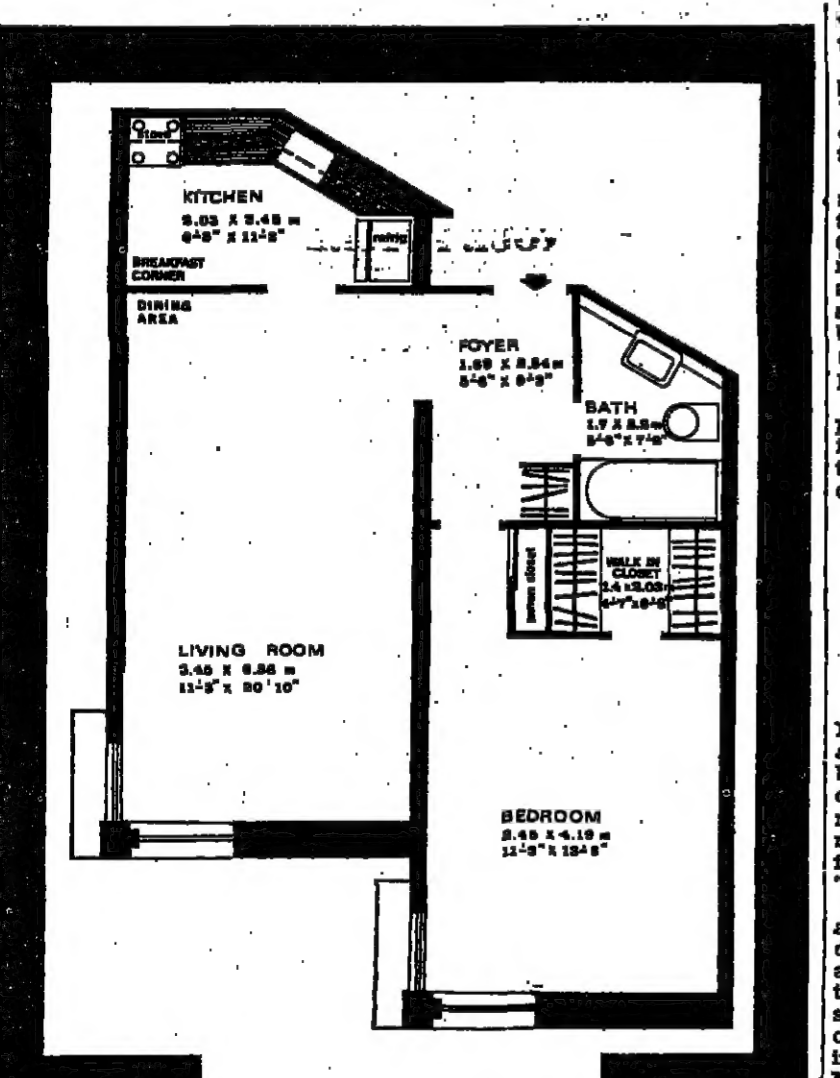

Eilat is not worried about occupancy next year, because the 25th Anniversary of the State promises an unprecedented influx of holiday-makers. "Israel will have 4,000 more rooms in the coming season, an increase of almost 25 per cent. Tourism should swell by 20 per cent to 900,000 visitors, so accommodation will be less crowded, which is good," Mr. Pops said.

But 1974 may herald a slowdown for hoteliers, because the steadily rising volume of travellers could lag behind the exceptional spurt in hotel construction, Mr. Pops fears.

The best way to overcome the problem is to accelerate the construction of amenities other than hotels, he suggests. After spending IL150m on accommodation in Eilat, there is a case for investing another IL10m in nightclubs and other places of entertainment.

Architects deplore the rigid building rules laid down by the Eilat authorities. "All hotels on the coast front are obliged to be of the same height, to have the same external surface and the same colour, and to be erected on the same pyramid pattern of receding terraces (which adds to building expenses, they say).

There is a general feeling that Sheraton International will not accept this kind of "architectural regimentation," one official told The Post.

Post article nets big order for furrier

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA — A report in The Jerusalem Post, published on November 2, has netted a big export order for Kuehnreich Brothers furriers. The report described a new method developed by the firm for sewing coat skins together with "invisible" seams.

Shlomo Kuehnreich, returning from a business trip to Europe yesterday, told The Post that in Geneva a Jewish furrier he met referred to the Post report and asked to see one of the "bodies" (lengths of made-up fur ready for cutting into coats), to examine the seams. Mr. Kuehnreich showed him the "body," and the furrier on the spot bought all the eight he had taken with him as samples — for $10,000. The Italian furrier also placed an open order for "as many as you can supply."

Mr. Kuehnreich added that, wherever he met Jewish furriers in Europe during the trip, "they had all read The Post" and he needed no further introduction.

But the Ministry of Commerce and Industry has not yet reacted to his complaint, published in The Post report of November 2, on the company's financing difficulties: Kuehnreich must pay a 20 per cent import levy and is not permitted more than three months' suppliers' credit on the import of the coat skins, which are very expensive.

BURNT FINGERS

But the Treasury has burnt its fingers at this game once before, in 1967 and 1968, when it published returns for 1963 and 1964. Despite this four-year delay, it was found that one-quarter of the files had still not been finalised, and almost another quarter were on appeal.

Accumulating and printing all the information involved a lot of work, "and the general public was not really interested," says the spokesman of the Internal Revenue Department, Mr. David Bar-Haim. "We published 500 copies in 1967, and only 300 in 1968 — and many of these are still unsold."

Chief shortcoming of the system is that the figures published are often misleading. Not all rich men have large current incomes — often they are spending out of capital gain. Thus "the owner of a may enterprise may figure as receiving a smaller salary than one of his own senior employees. The fact that his company has been taxed appears elsewhere.

"Alternatively, there was the case of a shop on Jaffa Road in Jerusalem, which could be considered to have made a profit of IL107,000. But the three partners drew IL35,000 each as extra wages. So only IL72,000 appeared as profit. The shoemaker's 'door' showed a profit of IL3,300."

This makes for bad blood, and "we cannot have an explanatory footnote under every other entry," says Mrs. Bar-Haim. To make things more complicated still, German restitutions are tax exempt, and income from fixed assets overseas also have a privileged tax situation, in order to encourage repatriation of foreign exchange.

Bankers oppose new Law of Trade Practices

Jerusalem Post Economic Reporter

Bankers are up in arms against the application of the new Trade Practices Law to their affairs. "We are already exposed to the inspection of the Examiner of Banks," their representatives told the Knesset Economic Committee on Wednesday. "We do not need another authority intervening in our activities."

Dr. Yehoshua Jaffe, Commissioner for the Consumer, defended his view before the committee. The law he sponsored requires that suppliers provide a full and correct description of the goods and services they offer, together with information about prices and credit terms. Questioned about this yesterday, Dr. Jaffe told The Jerusalem Post that the average depositor does not know how much the bank charges for handling his account, how much interest he is supposed to get, or what ledger fees he pays.

There is no reason why the law should make an exception in favour of the financial sector, he said. Dr. Jaffe agrees that there should not be several administrative agencies dealing with the same branch, and went along with the suggestion of Dr. Meir Heth, Examiner of Banks, that the relevant rules and regulations could be incorporated in the proposed Banking Law.

But this bill will take a number of years to become law. Dr. Jaffe offered in the meantime to delegate his powers under the Trade Practices Law to the Examiner of Banks for his sector. The committee is considering this and other viewpoints expressed at Wednesday's meeting, it is learned.

Stocks firmer as A-I Paper plunges

TEL AVIV — The Stock Market was generally firmer yesterday. Enthusiasm among traders has been growing and investors are again moderately optimistic on future prospects. Buying was selective, however, concentrating on a few issues. Turnover firmed and reached IL3.4m, of which 60 per cent was traded in the variables.

A bloc of 180,000 shares of I.L.D.C. registered was traded in the variables at 207 1/2, half a point higher than in the opening and on Wednesday. The bearer shares, whose turnover usually exceeds that of registered shares, closed at 210, up 1 1/2, with 35,000 shares traded. Other land and development shares were very quiet.

American-Israel Paper Mills was quoted "sellers only" in the opening and closed at 44 1/2 — tumbling 5 1/2 points, with a turnover of 27,700 shares. This is believed to have been caused by an article in the "Wall Street Journal" on Wednesday. In it, a Milwaukee-based accounting firm reported its financial findings and future prospects for A.I.P. The article said $7 or $8 was a realistic price for the stock. Consequently the stock appeared on the American Stock Exchange Wednesday night on the "most active" list (37,000 shares), and its price tumbled $2, to 9 1/2, yesterday.

Other industrial shares scored low turnovers and only small price changes. Delek gained 2 1/2 points, closing at 194 1/2.

Financial and investment shares were greatly in demand. About 142,000 shares of I.D.B. pushed the price up to 261 1/2, but it closed at 259 1/2, a net gain of one point. Discount "A," as a result of profit-taking following sharp rises in the past days, had a price drop of 2 1/2 points, to 578. Bank Hapoalim gained two points (308), and Bank Leumi was up 1/2, to 330.

Dialogue with American Jewry

THE special session in Israel this week of the Presidents' Conference of 30 major American Jewish organizations is a new departure. While these leaders of the American Jewish community have for the most part visited Israel frequently in their individual capacities, the Presidents' Conference as a collective body has never done so.

Jewish leaders are prepared to see that Israel must be permitted to define its own needs and interests, also, as Jews and as Jewish leaders, demand to be heard.

Yet on issues which touch the core of Jewish welfare and survival it is the President's Conference, since its establishment in 1955, which has been able to muster American Jewry into a single voice. It has, for example, consistently played a key role in expressing to the U.S. Government the sentiments and interests of American Jewry regarding issues which directly affect Israel.

Thus while there may be some justice in the criticism voiced in the Conference session yesterday that Israeli leaders are not willing to listen to strictures coming from the Diaspora, the answer is that American Jewry should shout louder. For it is intensity of concern that is the mark of identification.

ISRAEL PRESS

I.D.F. lesson for Syria

Davar (Histadrut) assumes the Syrians—whether they like it or not—will be forced to observe the cease-fire. The paper remarks that if they do not do so, they will have to learn the hard way that the Israel Defense Forces are bound to secure the well-being of the Golan Heights settlements.

Hanodia (Agudat Yisrael) writes: "The resolution of the Labour Party's Central Committee on issues of State and religion is an ultimatum to the Chief Rabbi, who will be required to solve the problems of those barred from marriage under the halacha. This is a threat whose outcome could be destructive. It is also a callous intervention by the public establishment in the religious judicial system and will not be tolerated."

Ha'aretz (non-party), doubting whether Syria will draw the logical conclusions from the I.D.F.'s latest action, writes: "The Syrian regime has presumably taken into account the price it might have to pay for dispatching the terrorists. The Syrians have fresh reasons for action, namely: the Egyptian leadership's waning influence in the Arab world, the relative quiet on Israel's other borders, and Syria's isolation in the Arab world, because of its lack of initiative against Israel."

Al Hanihsar (Mapam), discussing the appointment of Knesset member Shlomo Rosen as Deputy Minister of Absorption, suggests that the requirements of the increasing immigration from the Soviet Union justify the appointment. The paper further believes that the opposition factions in the Knesset would also admit this, "were they not so keen to criticize the Government."

Syria: from caution to brinkmanship

THE repercussions of the clashes along the Syrian-Israel border may well determine the immediate future of the political efforts to find a peaceful Israel-Arab settlement.

Syria's Ba'ath Party regime headed by President Hafez Assad, this month marked the second anniversary of the bloodless coup in which it seized power from the extreme leftist wing of the same party. Until the recent series of face-ups the regime had demonstrated a "deal of caution, and reasonableness towards the conflict with Israel, despite its declared tough line of policy.

It is in such intensification of concern that the future of both Jewish unity and peace lies. Certainly if the President's Conference session in Israel fosters greater understanding not only of Israel's problems but of the forces in American Jewish life which have prevented such strengthening of concern it will have amply served our common interest.

Links with Moscow

The second factor was Syria's coordination with the Soviet Union. This increased late last summer as Moscow hurried to consolidate its presence in both Syria and Iraq, in search of a substitute to Egypt, which expelled the Russians from its territory last July.

Both factors eventually had grave consequences for Syria's Middle East outlook. The terrorists involved that country in border confrontations with Israel, and the Soviets provided her and the terrorists with armaments and political backing against Israel.

There are some 6,000 active terrorists in Syria today. The bulk are stationed in the south and the south-east. Syria also plays host to about half of the 6,000-strong, but ineffectual Palestine Liberation Army (P.L.A.) Syria has in fact developed into the main terrorist base. Libya sends contingents there, from among the 8,000 saboteurs whom the regime of Colonel Mu'ammer Gaddafi has been training for a "liberation war" against Israel. These terrorists included field saboteurs who were sent to operate on the "front" in the ranks of the Fatah and others who were dispatched to carry out anti-Israel attacks abroad within the framework of the Fatah-affiliated "Black September" organization.

Syria has also been bolstering its 110,000-strong army through a stepped-up flow of Soviet equipment. The main aim seems to be raising the Syrian ability, both on the ground and in the air, to counter Israel's operations against increased terrorist activity from Syria.

Flow of arms

The Soviets were at the same time reported to be exchanging Syria's 80 MIG 17 jet fighters for MIG 21s to improve the combat capability of the 10,000-man Air Force, which possesses about 300 warplanes, already including some 100 MIG 21s. The Soviets have also introduced sophisticated armaments into Syria's armoured forces, which has over a thousand tanks, including T54s, T55s, and SU100s, and the artillery corps which includes field guns of 122mm, 150mm and 152mm, and anti-aircraft guns of 37mm, 57mm 85mm and 100mm.

Apparently without calculating the consequences of escalating tension, Egypt wants to keep the confrontation with Israel live on other Arab fronts, with an eye to the U.N. debate on the Middle East, next week.

CALL FOR DEATH FOR TERRORISTS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, I refer to your editorial of October 21, "Death demands" in which you quote the philosophy of Great Britain's law makers as well as the recent decision of the U.S. Supreme Court on the subject of the death penalty and compare it with the view of the Israeli security authorities.

May I say that a comparison between the situation in the two western countries and that in Israel cannot be meaningful if only for the reason that the two Western democracies are countries at peace or at least countries involved in military action outside of their own territory, while Israel is at war notwithstanding the uneasy cease-fire.

- 1. Hit and run attacks at places where large numbers of civilians are gathered, such as markets, department stores, buses including school buses.
2. Planting of time bombs in public places like railway stations, bus terminals, etc.
3. Hijacking of airplanes with subsequent demands for release of prisoners legally sentenced to prison terms because of their proven participation in terrorist activities.

The only tenable answer to acts of war of this kind must be to introduce martial law under which any person accused of terrorist activity has to come before a military tribunal within 24 hours after being apprehended. If the tribunal finds the accused guilty, the death penalty should be mandatory whenever the action of the defendant or one of his unapprehended accomplices has caused the death of any of the victims. The death sentence should be executed at once. The alternative to the death penalty must be a verdict of acquittal.

Persons concerned with the possibility that a defendant could be the victim of an error of judgment, and that the execution of an erroneous death sentence is not reversible, may bear in mind that the death of the innocent victim is not reversible either, and that quite often hits the innocent and the guilty alike.

They also may keep in mind that a great many innocents would be saved just by depriving the terrorists of objects to barter for. If there had not been jailed guerrillas in Israel the eleven murdered Olympic athletes might still be alive and so might be the young woman passenger who died on the hijacked Belgian airliner in May of this year.

'MANIPULATING RELIGION'

"THE Land of Israel trembled for a distance of 400 paras by 400 paras."

This Talmudic description of shocked reaction is most appropriate to the current feeling in Israeli religious circles regarding the lightning exhibitionist operation of Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren in legitimizing Hanoch and Miriam Langer the brother and sister who have been prevented from marry... by the ruling handed down by a district rabbinical court, and upheld by the Supreme Religious Court, that they were mamzerim.

It is not the intention of this article to touch on the halachic aspects of the case, since I am not the authority to pass judgment on the steps taken by Rabbi Goren towards the legitimization and marriages of the Langers. But I cannot refrain from commenting on the bad taste which characterized the entire operation.

Rabbi Goren committed a grave error in bringing Defence Minister Moshe Dayan, by the Langer wedding, implicitly indicating that the same talents for strategy, surprise and secret swiftness which Mr. Dayan has used for military coups were used by the new Chief Rabbi in pulling off this rabbinical coup. Such methods gain glory when used for military triumphs; in rabbinical matters they can earn only infamy.

Cheap act

Even the secularists who cheered Rabbi Goren's action saw the cheap exhibitionism of the operation. First came his attempt to force Chief Rabbi Ovadia Yosef into cooperation. This was followed by a statement that he would not agree to an installation ceremony until the mamzerim problem was solved as he had promised. While building up to his move he held meetings with young Mapam members and handed out secret promises to the Independent Liberals that the problems of marriages forbidden by halacha would be solved. Climaxing all this was a lightning, undercover move together with judges whose identities he refused to disclose, a move which ignored the rulings of the District and Supreme Rabbinical courts, a move for which he quickly prepared sensational coverage by the press, radio and television. A notorious problem now faces religious Jewry in Israel. Something historically grave has transpired and we are forced to consider steps which will provide not merely temporary solutions but a long-range plan of action.

Interviewers from the local press and radio ask me, as a Jerusalemite well acquainted with the old dispute between Rabbi Yosef Chaim Sonnenfeld and Rabbi Kook, whether the present dispute between Rabbi Goren and his critics is not a renewal of that controversy. I try to explain to them that there is a world of difference between the two situations.

Not ideological

The dispute between Rav Sonnenfeld and Rav Kook was an ideological debate over how the religious community should relate to secular Zionism. This classic dispute between the Aguda and Mizrahi philosophies was conducted by two leaders who personified the differing viewpoints. The present controversy is not an ideological dispute but a reaction of Orthodox Jewry similar to the reactions of the Hataam Safer and Rabbi Shimon Raphael Hirsch to the dangers presented to their European communities by the inroads of Reform Judaism which threatened to invade our religion with another character.

The situation in modern Israel is worse than that in Pressburg and Frankfurt. The Chief Rabbi's institution over which Rabbi Goren has gained control has played a vital role in the life of the State.

Catering to liberals

There was always an inherent danger in the powers which election procedures gave to secularists for determining the choice of a chief rabbi. But this truly still served as the central authority on marriage and divorce for all of Israel. On the Supreme Rabbinical Court sit such scholars of stature as Rabbi Yosef Shalom Elyashev and Rabbi Bezalel Zolty.

But along has come Rabbi Goren with an attempt to adapt the halacha to the secular wishes of the Independent Liberals. He has made promises to them—and he has fulfilled them. Rabbi Goren insists on catering to them and their Mapam partners in irreligious philosophy.

If there was once hope that the election of Rabbi Ovadia Yosef as Chief Sephardi Rabbi against the wishes of the Goren backers would serve as a check against the influence of Rabbi Goren, this hope has now vanished. The undercover operation which ignored both the Supreme Rabbinical Court and the Sephardi Chief Rabbi proved that Rabbi Goren has his own set of rabbinical values. He cares not for the opinions of revered Torah sages but rather seeks favour in the eyes of Golda Meir and Moshe Dayan. The Israeli public looks upon Rabbi Goren as a man capable of manipulating halacha to ensure the stability of a Government coalition.

All this poses the question of what is to be done. At the foundation of the State even the secular leaders understood the need for rabbinical control of marriage and divorce as a means of assuring a united nation. This led to the historic letter from Jewish Agency leaders to Agudat Yisrael guaranteeing this point. But if we introduce such practices as ignoring Torah authorities in favour of pleasing the secularists it will lead to a separation of religion and state, for rather than adapt religion to the ideas of the Independent Liberals and Mapam it is better to effect such a separation. Such a step will have serious and far-reaching ramifications, including the maintenance of genealogical records and a nation divided in two.
